Williams says he had a right to run the game as the Fort Erie Exposition Company, with a charter from Canada. Riley was at one time interested in the policy game with Williams. He introduced inhe latter to some gamblers in Jersey City, and when the place was raided, Riley says. Williams deserted his pals, who are now in jail. For this reason he had the Brooklyn headquarters raided yesterday.

The game, Riley says, is backed by Williams's wife, who is wealthy. She was in court this morning.

From the few remarks of Ferd Potter yesterday it is evident that a number of Broadway property holders will oppose the open cut method of tunnelling that thoroughfare, but will not object to the underground system.

The Commission would not hear Mr. Patter on the question of construction, and it is doubtful if protests of the character which he wishes to make will be heard in public meeting, as it is claimed such a course would open the way for endless discussion by cranks who have a variety of new-fangled schemes which they wish to present.

The Broadway property owners will probably be afforded an opportunity to present their views on construction at a private meeting of the Commission at an early day.
